

BODY PARAGRAPHS

In body paragraphs, you need to discuss your reasons and provide examples or explanations to support your point of view, and persuade the reader that your ideas are relevant.

At the beginning of each body paragraph, you need to state the main idea of that paragraph (topic sentence). Your topic sentence must include the essay topic and the main idea that you will explain.

Thesis statement:

“I definitely agree with the idea that all people in the country should have access to higher education free of charge for several reasons related to basic human rights and the development of the country.”

Here, there are two main ideas to be discussed in the body paragraphs.

- Body paragraph 1 will be on human rights.
- Body paragraph 2 will be on the development of the country.

Sample Body Paragraph 1:

The right to education is one of the basic human rights, and therefore all people have a right to improve themselves after high school for free. First of all, all people should have equal opportunities to have education, and this should be guaranteed by law. This is one of the most important aspects of democracy. To give an example, when universities charge students fees, only people who can afford it can enter university, and get the opportunity to become better educated. For others, the only way to compete with others is to look for student loans or scholarship. It is not fair to treat people differently just because they were born to a family lacking financial security for education. Therefore, equality should be maintained by the state at least in the case of university education. Besides, people also have a right to improve themselves regardless of their background, age, sex, or financial status. When the education opportunities are not free for all, smart and skilful people who cannot take the entrance exam may miss the opportunity to become better people. People sometimes discover their capabilities and aspirations later in life. When such experienced people decide to improve themselves through higher education, they may start their own business, create job opportunities for others, or just become better people for the society and a good example for their children. Thus, the society would benefit from people who strive to improve themselves when people have the right to do that. In short, higher education should be free for all people as the opportunity to improve oneself is a basic human right.
